

ROME UNIVERSITY RESEARCHER LECTURES AT IMLI

Dr. Federica Mucci (Researcher in International Law at Faculty of Law, University of Rome “Tor Vergata”) visited the Institute and lectured on “Characteristics and types of international organizations: co-operation and integration international organizations”.

Dr. Mucci began her lecture with an introduction to the international organizations as “functional” subjects of the international legal order. She then focused on the “law making” powers of international organizations.

In explaining the international organizations as “functional” subjects of the international legal order Dr. Mucci emphasized that ‘the institutional structure and the internal rules of the organization must ensure a certain autonomy of its deliberations, without being perceived as an excessive ‘threat’ to States’ sovereignty.’ She continued by stating that ‘the co-operation mechanisms are to be studied to obtain effective rapprochement between different positions of States’.

Regarding the “law making” powers of international organizations, Dr. Mucci explained that ‘the adoption of acts is provided for in the Statute of the Organization. However, the Statute will usually enable the Organization’s organs to adopt only non-binding external acts as a result of the necessity to accept the majority’s vote to ensure the organization’s autonomy from its members.’ Dr. Mucci referred however to two outstanding exceptions, namely, the EU binding acts and the deliberative powers of the UN Security Council. She stated that ‘in particular, the EU system produces ‘juridical integration’ among the domestic legal orders of the member States’.
