OVER 30 YEARS SERVING THE RULE OF INTERNATIONAL MARITIME LAW
SYNOPSIS

The fluidity and complexity of modern-day maritime security challenges require an in-depth understanding of the law of the sea, maritime law, as well as national policies and regulations before responding to them. The newly emerging challenges and transformed threats which include, maritime terrorism, drug trafficking, migrant smuggling and use of unmanned vessels, are largely unregulated in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982. This has led to the adoption of various international conventions and protocols.

The IMLI Course on International Maritime Security Law has been specially designed to address the various critical maritime security threats to the international rule of law at sea and the freedom of navigation. The Course will cover in detail the gravity of these threats and the existing applicable international laws and State practices deterring the same.

The Course will therefore focus on current legal developments ensuring the safe navigation of ships, protection of offshore installations and coasts of maritime States. It also covers the contribution of international organizations, especially the International Maritime Organization, and the role of regional cooperation. The Course will also look into the special status of warships and examine the jurisprudential contribution of international courts and tribunals to this branch of the law.

The Course offers participants, who are required to perform efficiently the responsibilities assigned to them as senior government officials and shipping executives, the opportunity to interact with professionals, in an academic atmosphere. It aims to reinforce their knowledge, skills and proficiency in international maritime security law.

It is anticipated that at the end of the Course, participants will be equipped with both theoretical and operational strategic-legal knowledge which will enable them to respond to and/or advise the industry, maritime forces, and other government departments on maritime security-related issues.
