IMLI COURSE ON INTERNATIONAL MARITIME SECURITY LAW

IMLI is pleased to announce its 5th Annual Course on International Maritime Security Law, aimed at equipping professionals with the knowledge and skills necessary to address complex maritime security challenges. With emerging threats such as maritime terrorism, migrant smuggling, IUU fishing, unmanned vessels, and cybercrimes, the current legal framework, primarily the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982, may not be sufficient in responding to all these challenges. This realization called for the adoption of additional international conventions, protocols, and guidelines which reflect the efforts of the international maritime community to ensure the safety and security of the oceans.

The IMLI Course on International Maritime Security Law is tailored to confront these critical threats to maritime rule of law and navigation freedom. Delivered in a hybrid format, the course comprises two parts: Part A covers General Principles of International Maritime Security Law, while Part B focuses on Specialized Areas, both led by renowned experts in the field. Participants have the flexibility to attend sessions online or in person.

If you wish to be part of this unique journey of learning, exchanging experiences and information, and networking, apply by not later than 25 March 2024 to admissions@imli.org.
